Our work lives between exteriors and interiors: from the rhythm and thought of footsteps to the space behind a wall. It is a consumer. It is an avid traveler. Its mission is unrestricted potential. It feeds on systems that can be worked until undermined. It isolates moments of logic that amount to less than meaning and it begs to push with and against them. If material is a political stance, our work is tripartisan: embracing facts, fictions and alternate realities with equanimity. It will take everything within reach and make a meal; for it needs to digest at all times. Our work is a to go container, but bigger and with more compartments than usual.
